Wedding photographers are rallying under the banner of a new San Francisco photography agency, Webster Hill (www.websterhill.com). The Bay area sees 40,000 weddings a year, but independent photographers struggle to stay busy. Low startup costs, new technology and the fact that no licensing is required have made the photography industry extremely competitive. Many have jumped at the chance to market their services through a photo agency. Webster Hill received over 150 responses to its first recruitment ad within the first 24 hours.

Founder Natalie Sousa worked as a professional photographer for 8 years, seeing first-hand the challenges faced by both photographers and their clients in a crowded field. Early this year she decided to build a company that matches engaged couples to local wedding photographers.

"The market is swamped right now and it is tough for clients to wade through all the vendors," Sousa explained. "We think good work should stand above the rest and we want to provide the high-ground."

Webster Hill is the region's first search service for wedding photographers and offers the only 100% satisfaction guarantee in an industry dominated by mom and pop shops. Webster Hill takes care of all customer service, negotiation and fulfillment, leaving photographers with the part of the job they like best, shooting.
